

in this game called life i was given a wooden spoon and that spoon is cracking i feel the splinters in my mouth the more i learn, the sadder i become today i turn eighteen neither younger nor older only more aware of time lately i have questioned who i am and what i stand for what does religion really mean?
is it spiritually true or something created to satisfy what is missing in the human world the more self-aware i become the more i grasp my lack of understanding what i know is limited what i don't know is limitless blowing out eighteen candles i realized another year had passed and i was no happier my hunger for material things rules my conscience while my connection to those i hold close begins to fade
as i leave for college i can see the strings growing looser and longer my arms reach out while the quicksand of the world pulls me down
and what happens when all my questions are answered what happens when my problems are fixed
what happens
it never ends
and then it ends